AlphaTech Software, Inc became the first to enter the field of office automation, building a reputation for designing high-quality and user-friendly database and accounting programs for business and industry. When they decided to enter the word-processing market, their engineers designed an effective, versatile, and powerful program that AlphaTech felt sure would lead in the market. For reassurance, the company asked the senior program designer, Abid to supervise writing the instruction manual. The result was description of every detail of the program's operation.

As the marketing began, cries for help flooded in from office workers who were so confused by the massive manual that they couldn't even find out how to get started. Experts reviewed the program and judged it "too complicated" and "difficult to learn." After an impressive start, sales of the new word processing program dropped.

The company rewrote the instruction manual that led new users step by step through introductory exercises and told them how to find commands quickly. But the rewrite cost $350,000, a year's lead in the market, and its reputation for producing easy-to-use business software.

1. Identify the correct objective of rewriting the Manual.
   a) To make it readable for the office workers.
   b) To make it comprehensive for the users.
   c) To spend the extra money that company had.
   d) To punish Abid for writing a bad manual.
2. What should Abid have done to save the loss?
   a) He should have written it in Urdu.
   b) He should have asked someone else to write.
   c) He should get it proofread before finalizing.
   d) He should have written a short manual.
3. Identify the correct response of the complaints from office workers.
   a) Sarcastic replies for being unintelligible
   b) Scold them for not reading properly
   c) Take them into consideration & make necessary changes in manual.
   d) Fire them from the job.
4. What consideration Abid should have made while writing the manual?
   a) Consider the intelligibility of the users.
   b) Use so many jargons
   c) Consider the age of workers.
   d) Consider the nationality of workers.
5. How Abid should have behaved in the situation?
   a) Accept the feedback and improvise.
   b) Blame the loss on his team members.
   c) Resign from his post.
   d) Inform his superiors about the issue.
6. Which approach AlphaTech should use to save themselves from future loss?
   a) Invest less amount in user manual.
   b) Never assign the task to Abid.
   c) Get manual proofread by Paid Freelancers.
   d) Formulate a team of SEO based Technical Content Writers.
